Activity (Project-Based Learning Assignment): History in Your Own Backyard (Social Studies, Grades K-12)

Objective

There are many ways that people learn about their past, their culture, and their traditions. While much of this knowledge can be gained through books, history and culture can also be passed down through experiences and personal records. One such record that can teach more about the past is the home movie. Home movies enable the engaged observer to learn about ways of life from the not-so-distant past. Styles, cultural practices, and architectural features of an area are all subjects that are sometimes difficult to learn about from books and may not even be documented. In this lesson, students will learn about the concept of local and community history through the medium of home movies and locally-produced footage, including their own films and interviews.

Students will research their hometown, county, or region of the state to examine how it changed over the past 50-100 years using, among other resources, primary source films from the Texas Archive of the Moving Image available at www.texasarchive.org.

Using project-based learning, which improves retention of new content and develops students' personal connections to the past, students will investigate local events and landmarks to examine how they changed over time in their geographic area of the state. By focusing on the physical, economic, political, and cultural changes in their communities, students will connect the past to the present, making critical observations and assessments about what elements changed or remained the same. Apart from a structured student-driven project, students will also individually research their own personal histories through family interviews, identifying the political, social, and economic reasons their families moved to the area. Lastly, students will work together to make short films documenting their modern community, highlighting the important changes that have occurred there over the last half century to present to the class.

To submit student videos to TAMI's collection: To encourage students to share and save Texas history through film, classes can submit their student videos to the Texas Archive of the Moving Image's collection. Teachers can contact info@texasarchive.org to discuss submitting class videos to the Archive to represent their region of the state. The videos will be featured in a special online exhibition at www.texasarchive.org. Make your class a part of Texas history!

Process

Prior Knowledge

1. The following lesson assumes students have some knowledge of local and community events, history, and culture.
2. Students should have an understanding of the concept of “historical thinking,” or an analytical view of the past that takes into account different sources and perspectives. (The core components of historical thinking include understanding multiple accounts and perspectives, analyzing primary documents, and understanding historical context.)
3. Students should have the skills to conduct research on their subject and create a basic multi-media presentation on their topic using the resources available to them.
4. Students should have familiarity with recording devices for conducting interviews, Microsoft PowerPoint, basic filming from Smartphone or video cameras, and basic video editing software.

Hook

1. Pick a regional film from the list below. Have students watch it, reflect, and write down what they see, estimating the time period of each film, and observing different types of technology available at the time. Have the students pick a city they live nearest to or have traveled to recently. Have them discuss as a class how the city (primarily its skyline) changed over time.

Lesson

Hometown History

Examine the history of your hometown, county, or region of the state through primary source films from the Texas Archive of the Moving Image. Research local newspapers, reliable databases, and primary source films of your geographic area and compare and contrast how it changed economically, physically, politically, and socially. Have students work in pairs or small groups analyzing a number of approved primary and secondary resources. (See resources list below.) Have students examine the sources and respond in writing to the following questions:

- In what time period was your hometown founded (date)?
- What attracted immigrants to originally settle in this area?
- Over the past 50-100 years, what remains the same in your hometown/region?
- What industries have existed in this area?
- How do most people make a living today?
- What is the principal tourist attraction in this area?
- What community festivals or celebrations routinely occur here?
- Describe the physical climate of this region of the state.

TEXAS ARCHIVE
OF THE MOVING IMAGE

- Describe the political or social climate of this region.
- Were there any unique facts about your hometown/region revealed through TAMI's primary source films or other resources?
- Over the past 50-100 years, what changes do you believe are the most significant for your hometown/region? Explain.

Next, ask students to collaborate and write a one or two page report describing the political, social, physical, and economic changes that occurred in their hometown/region over the last 50-100 years. Additionally, teachers can give students time to create a short presentation demonstrating their findings for the class, which may include selected primary source videos to showcase in a PowerPoint presentation. Have students refer to the following regional film resources for their hometown/area in Texas.

TAMI's collection of films by region of Texas

- Region 1 - Panhandle
- Region 2 - North Central Texas
- Region 3 - East Texas
- Region 4 - Gulf Coast
- Region 5 - South Texas and Rio Grande Valley
- Region 6 - West Texas
- Region 7 - Central Texas

Independent Practice

Family History Research

For the independent practice, students will research their family's history, identifying when they moved to the area and what key factors motivated them to move. Student will answer the following questions in their oral history interviews and family history reports:

- When did your family arrive in this area?
- What economic reasons motivated them to move when they did?
- What political or social reason motivated them to move?
- How many family members live in the area or hometown today?
- Does your family plan on staying in the area in the future? Why?
- Do you plan to stay in the area? If not, where do you plan to go?

TEXAS ARCHIVE
OF THE MOVING IMAGE

Have students go back a few generations or more to trace their family's history in the region. Or, if their families moved recently, have them describe where they lived before and what motivated them to move to this area.

Students will conduct oral history interviews with their parents, siblings, grandparents or extended family members to complete their personal family histories. Students will need to know how to ask important questions in these interviews and be able to record or document them. After they have interviewed at least three family members, students will write about their family's history in the region in a traditional five body paragraph paper to turn in to their teachers that addresses the key questions above.

Extended Learning

Documenting the Present

Have students work in small groups (3-4 members) to make a short film documenting their modern hometown or region, filming key landmarks and places of significance in the community. Have students select subjects they find socially, economically, or politically significant in the region such as tourism, historic sites, key businesses in the area, key government buildings, schools and parks, or other attractions that best showcase their modern community.

Students' films should be around 5-10 minutes long. They will present their edited films to the class after they have been given time to effectively research, plan, and document their subjects. Students can make short videos using programs such as Windows MovieMaker, iMovie, or Blender (see resource list below) and share them by bringing in a thumb drive to class or using web platforms such as Vimeo and YouTube. Students should edit together short clips of different local sites that they can play for the class and discuss in more detail. Ensure that students select at least four key sites to display and explain their significance to the community. Have students shoot scenes of their hometowns in landscape orientation and, to encourage them to share and save Texas history through film, students can submit their films to the Texas Archive of the Moving Image's collection.

Teachers can contact info@texasarchive.org to discuss submitting class videos to the Archive to represent their region of the state. The videos will be featured in a special online exhibition at www.texasarchive.org. Make your class a part of Texas history!
